The Latin Side of Hot House By Raul de Gama

Steven Oquendo Latin Jazz Orchestra: Salsa Picante

Steven Oquendo is unapologetic about calling his regular weekly gig at Mamajuana Cafe in The Bronx Salsa Tuesdays. "I know that my heroes — Tito Puente, Tito Rodriguez and Ray Santos — preferred the term Afro-Cuban or Afro-Caribbean to describe our music," he says in a whisper-soft, melodic voice. Then, with a staccato laugh, he adds, "Think about it as pouring hot sauce on top of the beautiful music." Steven knows all too well how to make that happen. He worked it all out, and his 19-piece Latin Jazz Orchestra (LJO) has been playing Salsa Tuesdays at the fabled club in The Bronx every week for a decade. Best of all, they have been performing for free.

With seductive magic, Steven and the LJO draw Latin music lovers of all ages and stripes onto dance floors. He reveals his secret happily. "We curate our repertoire in a special way," he says. "What we want to do is to keep the spicy magic of the historic Palladium Ballroom alive forever," he avers, referring to the iconic ballroom, a fixture in the Big Apple and especially riveting from 1948 onwards when the legendary bands of Tito Puente, Tito Rodriguez and Machito held sway there before mambo, sadly, went out of fashion.

"Well," Steven says, "The LJO is bringing that age-old and hot salsa craze back to life." He continues with pride. "We are the only big band playing those same arrangements that once drove listeners and dancers crazy, exactly as in the heyday of Tito and Tito. Folks who have forgotten had better come on over to Dizzy's Club this month," he beckons with a laugh.

History Of Hot House Jazz

Launched in March 1982 by jazz writer Gene Kalbacher with his wife Lynn and Jeff Levenson, Hot House Jazz is the longest running jazz magazine in the Tri-State area. A free publication available in all the jazz venues, it's devoted solely to previews of jazz events throughout the New York Metropolitan area. It's the perfect guide for jazz enthusiasts who want to stay current, knowing that what's listed and who's featured in Hot House Jazz is happening the same month the magazine comes out either in print, online or on apps. Managing editor Gwen Kelley and her staff (a loyal crew of contributing writers and production/art director Karen Pica) keeps delivering the highest possible quality:

- We're broadening the scope and depth of our coverage.
- Our expanded online presence provides direct access to musicians' and venues' own websites
- Our pages are more numerous and colorful than ever before.
- And we deliver hard copies around the city before the last weekend of every month.

Entering its 5th decade, Hot House Jazz is stronger than ever. Its readership includes many New Yorkers but also jazz enthusiasts living far from New York, and outside the U.S. Loyal partners, musicians, club owners, concert promoters and record company execs eager to build the audience for the music rely on Hot House Jazz to advertise their events. Since jazz never stands still, neither will we!

TYLER BLANTON

THE SIDE DOOR / APRIL 8; SAINT PETER'S CHURCH / APRIL 23

Vibraphonist Tyler Blanton has given his chosen instrument a fresh and vibrant sound. Taking the mantle from luminaries such as Gary Burton and Bobby Hutcherson, Tyler is charting a course all his own by pushing the ball forward on what the vibraphone is able to do. Tyler's debut as a leader was 2010's Botanic, with saxophonist Joel Frahm, bassists Dan Loomis and Aidan Carroll, and drummers Richie Barshay and Jared Schonig.

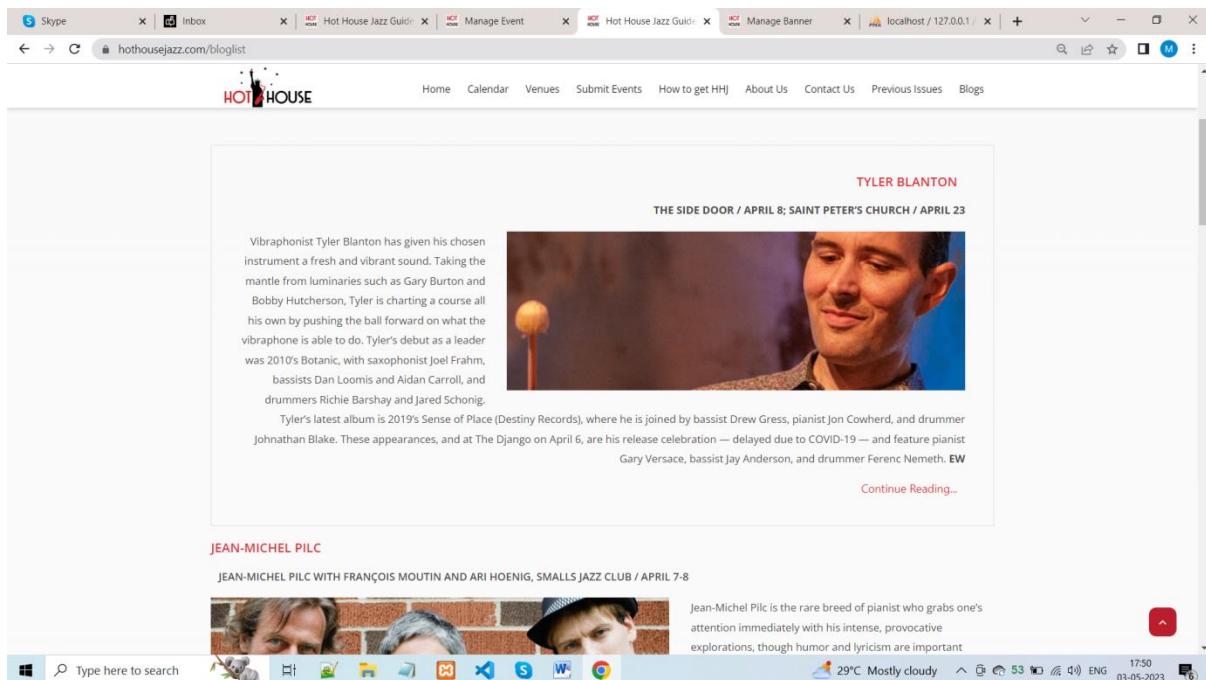

Tyler's latest album is 2019's Sense of Place (Destiny Records), where he is joined by bassist Drew Gress, pianist Jon Cowherd, and drummer Johnathan Blake. These appearances, and at The Django on April 6, are his release celebration — delayed due to COVID-19 — and feature pianist Gary Versace, bassist Jay Anderson, and drummer Ferenc Nemeth. EW

University jazz faculty, celebrating the compositions of some iconic jazz musicians from Philadelphia, Temple's home. Fly With The Wind, Terrell Stafford, Dick Oatts, Tim Warfield, Bruce Barth, Mike Boone, Justin Faulkner (BCM+D), is the Temple University jazz faculty sextet honoring four Philadelphia composers: Jimmy Heath, McCoy Tyner, John Coltrane and Lee Morgan. The title refers to one of Tyner's most compelling compositions. The opener, Heath's "All Members," an easy hard bop swinger, begins with Terell's clarion trumpet calls, answered by Dick's alto sax and Tim's tenor sax, the call-response leading to Terell's bright and brassy solo, as each member of the sextet takes a turn. Bruce, the pianist, arranged all four tracks. The centerpiece is the title tune, memorably recorded by the composer with his big band. Terell's horn presages the cyclonic theme, all the horns framing Bruce's piano as it rides the hurtling momentum of the piece. The theme is reprised behind driving solos from Terell and Dick, leading to a duologue between Tim's tenor sax and Justin's drums before Bruce returns with the theme and Terell ends it with a reprise of the opening heraldic horn.
